Addison Presbyterian Church Centennial To Be Observed

Observance of one hundred years service to this community to start Sunday morning—Communion to be celebrated Sunday afternoon—Supper and Program arranged for Monday evening.

The one hundredth anniversary of the Addison Presbyterian church will be celebrated Sunday and Monday, September 25 and 26. Plans for this long looked for event are all worked out and the committees are busy with the final arrangements.

The commemoration services will begin Sunday morning when the Rev. J. V. Axtell will deliver the Presbyterian hurch will deliver the centennial sermon at 10:30 A. M. At 5:00 P. M. holy communion will be celebrated, the entire membership of the church being urged to present themselves to receive the symbols. At this service there will be a roll call of the membership of the church, and all persons attached to it residing in Addison, are expected to answer unless detained by illness.

Monday at 6:30 P. M., a supper will be served in the dining room to the congregation and invited guests. This supper is being planned and will be served by the Gillet Club of the church. Short talks will be given by various members. Following the supper the assemblage will retire to the auditorium of the church where the general public is invited to share with them a list of addresses on the history and life of the Presbyterian church during the past one hundred years. Elder H. O. Elkins of Bath will be one of the speakers on this program.

Plans for the observance of this highly important milestone have been carefully worked out during a period of one year. The general committee consists of George H. Weatherby, Miss Fanny Curtis and Mrs.. H. G. Crane. The printing committee is made up of Maurice E. Miller, Mrs. Charles L. Crane and Lattimer Brewster.

Drawing from his memory stretched back for half a century, Mr. Weatherby has directed the drawing of a sketch of the first church building which was constructed in 1839 and burned in 1881. This has been reproduced by Kenneth Erwin and will be exhibited before the audience, Monday evening.

The printing committee is attempting to perpetuate the history of the church for future generations by compiling a book. This book will contain a list of the first members, the present membership, a list of the elders from 1832 to date, a number of photos and a historical sketch touching briefly upon the one hundred years of the church's activities. These books will be placed on sale, and provide a fitting momento of the occasion.

Many non-resident members and former members are expected to visit Addison for the celebration.

Interior of Addison Presbyterian Church

The main auditorium of the Addison Presbyterian Church, where the hundredth anniversary of the society will be observed Sunday and Monday The present building was completed fifty years ago. Money to purchase the pipe organ showing in the cut, was saved by the congregation doing without a pastor for the year following destruction of the old church by fire in 1881.

Public Service Commission Order Granting Pipe Line

Albany Sept. 15.—The Public Service Commission has granted a petition of the Southern Tier Gas Corporation to construct a gas plant in the towns of Rathbone, Cameron, Thurston and Bath, Steuben County. It is proposed to construct a thirteen and one-half mile pipe line from the Rathbone Field to the village of Bath for the purpose of delivering natural gas from the Rathbone Field to the village.

The cost of the construction is to be about $100,000. In addition to the pipe line from the natural gas field to the village some five miles of gathering lines will be constructed in the gas field at a cost of about $25,000. The main line from the fields to the village of Bath will cost about $51,744 and a compressor station will be built at a cost of from $20,000 to $22,000.

The natural gas to be delivered to the village of Bath will be distributed through the municipal gas plant which now serves the village. The result of the proposed construction will be to furnish the village of Bath and the territory between the Rathbone Field and the village with natural gas of a high heating value at a lower rate than is now paid for the manufactured gas distributed by the village.

The rates proposed to be charged to consumers in the village are 75 cents for the first 100 cu. ft.; 10 cents per 100 for the next 900 cu. ft.; 9 cents per 100 for the next 2,000 cu. ft.; and 8 cents per 100 for all gas over 3,000 cu. ft. The present rates are 75 cents for the first 100 cu. ft.; 20 cents per 100 for the next 900 cu. ft.; 19 cents per 100 for the next 9,000 cu ft.; 17 cents per 100 for the next 10,000 cu. ft. and 15 cents per hundred for consumption over 20,000 cu. ft.

Under the present rates 1,000 cu. ft. of gas amounts to $2.55 per 1,000 cu. ft, and under the proposed new rates for natural gas the charge will be $1.65 per 1,000 cu. ft. for the 1,000 which is scaled down to 80 cents per 1,000 if the consumption is over 3,000 cu ft.

The village will pay, pursuant to a contract entered into between it and the Southern Tier Gas Corporation, 50 cents per 1,000 cu. ft. up to 6,000,000 cu. ft. per month and 45 cents per cu. ft. in excess thereof. The natural gas will be brought to Bath and distributed by the village through its mains and the village plant is to be shut down and

Stalker Wins G.O.P. Nomination in Spirited Congressional Primaries

W. Sterling Cole gave the Representative of the 37th District a hard run for party honors—Margin of only about 140 votes separate candidates—Result not clear until Wednesday n[illegible]n Cole headquarters conced[illegible] Elmira [illegible] Woodhull gives Cole a majority.

Gale Stalker has been returned victor over W. Sterling Cole, in one of the most bitterly contested primary fights ever waged in the 37th Congressional District. So closely were the two candidates running, that the winner of the Republican nomination could not be exactly forecast until Wednesday noon. At that time the Elmira Star-Gazette compiled figures which showed Stalker leading by 456 votes, with all precincts reported except 14 in Steuben County. Awarding these to Cole by wide majorities still gave the Congressman the lead of approximately 140 votes, a narrow enough margin for any candidate to claim victory.

Old politicians throughout the Southern Tier were surprised at the great race Mr. Cole ran for the nomination. A practically unknown man through the district and hardly more than a youth in years, Mr. Cole waged an aggressive battle for the Republican nomination. Apparently supplied with plenty of funds, the young man carried on his campaign by means of widespread newspaper advertising, the effect of which nearly turned the tide in his favor.

Stalker was popular with the people of the rural communities, who have consistently supported him in every campaign he has entered. His victory is a victory of the dry forces which have supported his candidacy for ten years. Known as an ardent friend of dry legislation in Congress, Mr. Stalker was a man marked for defeat two years ago, when the anti-prohibition forces pitted Reuben Oldfield against him for the nomination. Oldfield went down to ignominious defeat two years ago, but this year he was again put "on the spot" by certain organizations the members of which are pledged not to vote for a dry man. Some wet newspapers even went so far as to name Mr. Stalker as a dry who must not be returned to Congress. His victory, by even so narrow a margin, therefore shows the determination of the drys, when a real fight is thrown at them.

Practically every other candidate was forgotten as the Congressional race became a matter of great uncertainty. However, Oldfield was again nominated by the Republicans for county clerk, the only other contest which developed.

The result of the Primary election at Woodhull is as follows:

Republican Ballot	Woodhull	Borden
Representative in Congress
W.Ste rling Cole	88	19
Gale H. Stalker	61	21
State Senator
Earle S. Warner	117
Member of Assembly
J. Austin Otto	115
County Clerk
Reuben B. Oldfield	79	22
Fred S. Bradley	51	18
Arthur E. Conley	19
Coroner
Milton G. Burch	104	32
W. Sylvester Cobb	87	34
Ethan L. Welch	39
Democratic Ballot
Representative in Congress
Julian P. Bretz	7
State Senator
Merritt M. Landon	7
Member of Assembly
Purdy Kinkaid	7
County Clerk
Charles J. King	8
Coroner
James J. Yanick	7
E. H. Hutton	7

In Addison Stalker received 191 votes against 176 for Cole, giving him a margin of 15. In 1930 Stalker polled 188 in the Addison districts' primary balloting. But, the opposition vote turned out to a greater extent Tuesday, Oldfield getting only 48 votes in 1930.

Mr. and Mrs. Howard Miles of this place are parents of a daughter born Friday.

Murray Slayton Well Spudded In By Hammondsport, et al

Newest hole in Addison-Rathbone field started downward Tuesday — Work on DeMun well resumed after shut-down for water supply—Newcomb well equipped with special pumping apparatus to increase production.

With two new wells going down this week, and work about to start on the pipe line, activity in the Addison-Rathbone gas fields has again taken on life.

The newest well in the field, the Murray Slayton No. 1, was spudded in by contractor Leland C. Wright Tuesday. This well is owned by Hammondsport Natural Gas Company and local interests. It is located only a short distance from the Newcomb No. 1, one of the best wells in the field and the chances are the best that this will be another good producer.

The crew on the Delwin DeMun No. 1, which was spudded in early last week, resumed drilling Wednesday after a shutdown of several days. The delay was caused by lack of water, nearby wells having been pumped dry without furnishing sufficient water to drill. Eventually the drillers ran a pipe line from a large spring on the Lewis Hill farm, and the necessary water is now being pumped up the hill to the DeMun. The DeMun is owned by Tri-State and Wright, Kris, Mays and Barry. The location is on proven territory between the Sylvia Allen wells and the Sovocool No. 1.

Hammondsport, et al, are this week installing a motor driven pump in the Newcomb No. 1, for keeping the hole free of water. This pump is an experiment in the local field and its use is expected to increase the production and life of the well by at least a third.

The Addison-Rathbone field is well known to produce gas from three horizons of the "Wright Sand", each of which for[illegible]ns is about 15 feet in thickness. In addition to these pay horizons there are other gas producing formations which have been cased off from other wells because veins of subterranean water were interposed which left to fill the holes would soon flood out the gas from the wells.

The practice in the past has been to drill below the last water vein and then run casing with a packer on the bottom which closed off both the water and the upper gas. In the Newcomb, the owners used six and three-quarters inch casing to a depth of approximately 400 feet, with a shoe on the bottom. The well was then drilled to a depth of 1228 feet, three pay horizons producing gas between 400 and 650 feet, and the three horizons in the Wright Sand being encountered between 750 feet and 1139 feet. The well when completed had a pocket of 189 feet to act as a receptacle for the incoming water. Two-inch tubing was then run to the bottom of the hole with a set of valves for a "lift" pump. A string of rods inside the two-inch tubing operate the valves and pull the water out of the hole without disturbing the flow of gas at the valves, or affecting the rock pressure of the well.

This arrangement enables the owners of the Newcomb well to take gas from six pay horizons instead of the three ordinarily utilized in this field, making a "pay" depth for the six formations of about 75 feet. The water will be pumped out of the pocket in the well frequently enough to keep the sands from being flooded.

This method of caring for wells is often practiced in fields when gas is obtained from more than one horizon, and has been found to be most advantageous for the life of the field and the production of the wells. Other wells in the field will doubtless be equipped in this way as drilling proceeds.

Latest news from the Southern Tier Construction Company, indicates that work on the pipe line to Bath will be undertaken in a few days. A complete report of the Public Service Commission on the granting of the authority for this line is printed in another column of this paper.

Mrs. Ray Stewart Hostess at Luncheon

Mrs. Ray Stewart entertained with a luncheon at her home Saturday, the occasion being the 14th birthday of her daughter Onnolee.

Cards were enjoyed during the afternoon. Lovely gifts were received by Miss Stewart.

The guests included Misses Constance Crane and Doris Chessman of Canisteo and Dorothy Paul, Betty Park, Doris Brown and the honor guest, Miss Stewart.

HONORS DAUGHTER WITH BIRTHDAY PARTY

Mrs. La Rue Symonds delightfully entertained at her home Thursday in honor of the 4th birthday of her daughter Laura.

Gifts were received by Laura and the afternoon enjoyably spent with games and amusements.

Refreshment were served to Martha Laffkas of Addison, Pauline Hotaling, Norine Kilmer and the honor guest, Laura Symonds.

MANY DEER SEEN NEAR WOODHULL

Several deer have been seen in this vicinity recently. Last Saturday morning two does and a buck were seen on the farm of Mrs. Winnie Royal.

Mr . and Mrs. Morrell Watkins and son Morrell Jr., and Mr. and Mrs. Jay Youngs were in Canisteo, Friday.

Plans Completed For Addition To the First National Bank

Work on the new annex to the Addison Bank building, will start in about two weeks, according to President Ray S. Brown.

At a meeting of the directors held recently, a contract for the building was let to Tilman & Moyer, bank architects and engineers. The new building will be 17 feet wide at the front, 40 feet deep and 8 feet wide at the rear, to conforming with the irregular shape of the lot. It will be fabricated by Tilman and Moyer and the actual time of erection should not exceed three weeks. The contract specifies that local labor and matrials shall be used as far as possible. The front will match the present construction, with stucco walls on the side and rear.

Besides the addition to the building, the banking house will be modernized in several ways by Tilman & Moyer. A new eleven ton door will be fitted to the safety deposit vault which will render it as near burglar proof as any vault in the country. The rear room out of which this vault opens, will be remodeled into a customers' room, with coupon booths for use of patrons of the bank who desire privacy while examining their personal papers. The present banking counter and fixtures will also be modernized by lowering the upper panel and narrowing the glass of the partition, to conform with fixtures in the most up-to-date banks.

The details of the new addition and remodeling plans have been carefully worked out by the architects during the past two weeks to bring the local banking home up to its highest possible standard of efficiency. The annex will provide a private, sound proof room for use of the president and those who wish to consult him, and enlarged facilities for the bookkeeping department, arranged conveniently to the counting room. When completed, the building will enable the officers and clerks to afford patrons of the bank the most careful personal service.

The addition, long needed by the rapid growth of the Addison Bank, has been planned at a most fortunate time. Due to the extremely low price of building materials and labor, the contract was let for one-half the price similar construction would have cost in 1929. The entire improvement including the mammoth vault door, will be completed for a nominal sum.

The Addison Bank is the most valuable business institution in this community. Its progress has been steadily upward from the time it was founded, and during the past period of deflation when less properly managed banks have been coming to grief, it has continued to show healthy growth which reflects admirably the sagacity and vision of its officers and directors.

LEADERSHIP THE TEST

"The deep question in this campaign is one of leadership—in leaders. The measure of truth of what they say is what they have said; the measure of what they will do is what they have done."

—Franklin D. Roosevelt

The Republican party could ask nothing better of the voters in this campaign than that they accept the test the Democratic nominee throws down as a challenge and let their votes at the coming election express their judgment in the sole matter of leadership as between the two candidates for President.

For nearly four years, in the face of one assault after another upon the financial stability of the United States, upon its banking structure, upon its industry, its commerce and its agriculture, Somebody has been leading the forces that have resisted these assaults. When there was likelihood that wages would be cut suddenly and drastically, Somebody brought forward a suggestion that maintained the standards for eighteen months until readjustments could be made by mutual agreement. When there was danger of strikes, riots and bloodshed such as had always occurred in previous similar periods, Somebody proposed a program that prevented such tragedies. When money went into hoarding and an epidemic of bank failures threatened widespread disaster, Somebody devised the National Credit Corporation which supported the banking credit of the Nation through an extremely critical period. When it became necessary to provide funds to carry railroads, banks, building and loan societies, insurance companies and other great concerns weighted with the public welfare, thru a long period of lean business, Somebody worked out the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to meet this great need. When a devastating drouth swept over 24 states, Somebody stepped in well in advance of the need and provided organization and funds through which the people were carried through to another crop year. When it first became apparent that there would be widespread unemployment, Somebody stimulated vast works of public construction through which hundreds of thousands of men were enabled to earn hundreds of millions of dollars. When there was danger that unemployment, already large, might be increased by the influx of large numbers of foreigners, Somebody interposed an executive order which averted this menace. When as a result of business conditions many thousands of people all over the country were on the verge of losing their homes and all they had invested in them, Somebody worked out a plan by which a great percentage of these homes could be saved for their owners.

In all these matters, and in many others, "Somebody" showed the highest degree of leadership.

Who was this "Somebody?"

Everybody knows the answer.

It was Herbert Hoover, President of the United States.

In all the long and desperate battle against the depression which has been carried on upon a hundred fronts during these past four years, Herbert Hoover has been as truly the leader of the forces working for resistance, recovery and rehabilitation as George Washington was the leader of the forces that fought the battles of the Patriots from Bunker Hill to York Town. Only the ignorant and the malignant or those blinded to the truth by political prejudice or personal ambition will deny that during this period of National stress and peril the President of the United States supplied leadership of the very highest type. He initiated every movement that was made, every measure that was taken, whether it was to maintain wages, to promote employment, to assure industrial peace, to study the banking situation, to afford relief to farmers who had lost their crops through drouth or by grasshopper invasion, to provide for the wants of the needy in the cities, to stimulate business activity in every direction.

What else by way of leadership could any man have done?

If the "deep question" in this campaign is leadership, as Governor Roosevelt declares—and to a great extent it is—then the Republicaan party may rest its claim with complete confidence on the record President Hoover has made, a record that has shown him to be, as Elbert Hubbard proclaimed, "the one towering leader of our time."

NATIONAL ECONOMY

A group of nationally prominent citizens headed by Rear Admiral Richard E. Byrd have organized the National Economy League which will seek "to revive and restore the American principle of representative government for the common good, and to secure the elimination of wasteful or unjustifiable governmental expenditures, Federal, State and local".

Ex-President Coolidge has advised Admiral Byrd of his hearty cooperation in the purposes of the new organization and has become Chairman of its National Advisory Council whose membership includes former Governor Alfred E. Smith, Newton D. Baker, Elihu Root, General John J. Pershing and Admiral William S. Sims.

The League seeks the elimination of the growing annual expeditures by the Federal Government, already in excess of $450,000,000 for benefits to veterans of the Spanish and World Wars who suffered no disabilities through war service. This expenditure is in addition to and entirely apart from "bonus" payments. The elimination of it will in no way interfere with a national policy of just and liberal treatment of veterans actually disabled in war service, or of the dependents of those who died in the service of their country, which policy the League vigorously supports.

Former Governor Smith is actively participating in the movement because he believes that a large part of the trouble we are going through at the present time is due to excessive taxation, which he believes could be cured to a great extent by the "elimination of every form of waste in the expenditure of Governmental funds to the end that taxation may be reduced, capital may more freely flow into trade and commerce and the widespread unemployment may be relieved."

Admiral Byrd has performed magnificent services for his country in recent years. He has given up his contemplated expedition to revisit the South Pole because he believes he can do more good by helping to head off the raids on the public treasury, attempted in many ways last winter.

It is interesting to note the attitude of war veterans, expressed within the week in the States of Illinois and Ohio, in opposing unjust and unwarranted demands upon Congress for bonus and aid legislation, at this very time when there is so much real want to be met through appropriations from the public treasury. This new movement among ex-service men is strictly in harmony with the work being undertaken by the National Economy League.

UNDOUBTED SERVICE

At the conclusion of the [illegible] sional Committee inquiry, which investigated complaints made against cotton cooperative organizations, Congressman Cox of Georgia said that "the cooperative movement is bound to spread, and it will spread, because of the undoubted services that the co-ops render."

Mr. Cox said also that he admittedly went into the investigation "with a feeling of hostility", and observed: "Both the (farm) board and the cooperatives have undoubtedly made mistakes. This was to be expected . . .. "

Not even the more zealous advocate of cooperation claims that all cooperatives are perfect. They are, as business organizations go, young. They have faced extraordinary obstacles in the past few years. They have been forced to work against great odds. And they have occasionally erred in judgment—as has every other business at one time or another. But they have demonstrated, whether they deal in cotton, milk, wheat, fruit or what-not, that they are the farmers' greatest hope for future agricultural stability and prosperity. They are a natural result of the economic evolution of the twentieth century.

Yes, the cooperative movement will go on. It will spread and will grow stronger. And the sooner all farmers join and loyally support their cooperatives, the sooner the farmer's economic problems will be solved.

YOUR DUTY TO PUBLIC SAFETY

The local fire department is obviously a community affair. But it's every citizen's affair as well.

The fire department is all that stands between him and the potential destruction of his home or place of business—worse than that, the destruction of irreplaceable lives. The quality of that department is as personally important as the safety of his savings.

It would be a fine thing if every person looked on the local department in the light of a hobby. He should, as best he can, investigate it, determine whether it is efficient or inefficient, whether its personnel is properly trained and directed, whether water and alarm facilities are of the best, and whether apparatus is of high grade standard make.

During the past few weeks there has been a new spirit of optimism along the economic front. It is not an optimism of the "prosperity is just around the corner" variety. It is instead, well grounded in fact.

The seasonal influences have been favorable. Commodity prices have shown a steady upward tendency. Stocks of goods of all kinds are rapidly becoming depleted, necessitating new buying. The outward flow of gold has been checked and reversed. And, finally, conditions abroad are definitely improved.

Best of all, is the feeling of confidence that is growing in the public mind. There can be no recovery without that. And when,, along with it, the economic indicators point the right way, we can look forward with a feeling of hopefulness.

Indian Summer — By Albert T. Reid

BRUCE BARTON ...writes of "THE MASTER EXECUTIVE"

Supplying a week-to-week inspiration for the heavy-burdened who will find every human trial paralleled in the experiences of "The Man Nobody Knows."

A LEADER OF MEN

In any crowd and under any circumstances the leader stands out. By the power of his faith in himself he commands, and men instinctively obey.

Bruce Barton

This blazing conviction was the first and greatest element in the success of Jesus. The second was his wonderful power to pick men, and to recognize hidden capacities in them. It must have amazed Nicodemus when he learned the names of the twelve whom the young teacher had chosen to be his associates. What a list! Not a single well-known person on it. Nobody who had ever made a success of anything. A haphazard collection of fishermen and smalltown business men and one tax collector—a member of the most hated element in the community. What a crowd!

Nowhere is there such a startling example of executive success as the way in which that organization was brought together. Take the tax collector, Matthew, as the most striking instance. His occupation carried a heavy weight of social ostracism, but it was profitable. He was probably well-to-do according to the simple standards of the neighborhood; certainly he was a busy man and not subject to impulsive action. His addition to the group of disciples is told in a single sentence:

"And as Jesus passed by, he called Matthew."

Amazing. No argument; no pleading. A smaller leader would have been compelled to set up the advantages of the opportunity. "Of course you are doing well where you are and making money," he might have said. "I can't offer you as much as you are getting; in fact you may have some difficulty in making ends meet. But I think we are going to have an interesting time and shall probably accomplish a big work." Such a conversation would have been met with Matthew's reply that he would "have to think it over," and the world would never have heard his name.

Jesus had the born leader's gift for seeing powers in men of which they themselves were often almost unconscious. One day as he was coming into a certain town a tremendous crowd pressed around him. There was a rich man named Zacchæus in town; small in stature, but with such keen business ability that he had got himself generally disliked. Being curious to see the distinguished visitor he had climbed up into a tree. Imagine his surprise when Jesus stopped under the tree and commanded him to come down saying, "To-day I intend to eat at your house."

The crowd was stunned. Some of the bolder spirits took it upon themselves to tell Jesus of his social blunder. He couldn't afford to make the mistake of visiting Zacchæus, they said. Their protests were without avail. They saw in Zacchæus merely a dishonest Jew; Jesus saw in him a man of unusual generosity and a fine sense of justice, who needed only to have those qualities revealed by some one who understood.

So with Matthew—the crowd saw only a despised tax-gatherer. Jesus saw the potential writer of a book which will live forever.

Golden Text: Psalm 116:15

Rev. Chas. E. Dunn

The lessons for the last quarter have dealt with the career of Moses. The narrative for this Sunday describes his death at Mount Nebo, and his burial in an unknown tomb. It affords a fit opportunity to pause and meditate upon the significance of this massive soul, the founder of the Hebrew religion. He it was who definitely made Jehovah the national God of the Israelites, and established the initial stages of their religious and political organization. Truly he was God's man of destiny.

Let us glance at his spectacular biography. We note, he was fortunate as a child, to fall under the protection of Pharaoh's daughter, who nurtured him as her own son. Thus he was a highly favored lad, reared in an environment of luxury and learning. But happily these privileges did not blind him to the sad plight of his brethren.

The curtain rises again and we find our hero brooding in the desert of Midian. Here an imperative divine call to leadership is sounded from a burning bush. Moses hesitates and objects. But he finally obeys, and the rest of his life is a revelation of the magnificance of his response.

Some one has said that nothing is wasted in human life when once a great idea takes hold of it. The idea of liberty, with justice, under God, took possession of the conscience and will of Moses with compelling power, so that all he had done in his long days of preparation came to his aid, and he became one of the greatest organizing geniuses in history, exhibiting a practical and powerful executive ability.

We see him stedfast and intrepid through the stormy vicissitudes of plague, passover, crossing of the sea, and wilderness wandering. He emerges as a world figure whose Ten Commandments are the Magna Charta of humanity.

The great man, Carlyle reminds us, is "the living light-fountain." Such was Moses. But let us remember that the secret of his greatness lies in the directing providence of God Who always remains with the man He chooses to serve Him.

IN LITTLE OLD NEW YORK by CARL H. GETZ

There is a shop in New York which maintains what is known as a perfume bar where scents are mixed to meet individual desire. Bottles of perfume are sold with the name of the owner on the label and a number. The contents are kept secret.

Some New York apartment house residents have windows looking out upon unpleasant surroundings. So they have pretty pictures painted on the windows.

In New York if you hunt long enough you can find a store which will sell you a pair of high stilts and a suit of clothes to go with it. The combination is usually used for advertising purposes.

A New York department store serves afternoon tea free to its customers.

New York has a motion picture theatre which shows nothing but news reels. It is a very popular house.

There are more men and women in New York who make a living by writing than in an other city in the world.

When a certain New York radio star—a woman singer—appeared at a local vaudeville house for a week's appearance, she received $7,500 for seven days' work.

Lowell Thomas, author, world-traveler and radio lecturer, has a 15 room apartment in New York and 200-acre farm at Pawling, seventy miles from New York. Thomas is an expert badminton player and built a gymnasium on his farm for that game exclusively.

When a certain advertising agency in New York wanted to equip a dining room in its skyscraper quarters, it bought a hundred-year old New England farm house and transported the dining room and kitchen to the city, fireplace and all.

There is an executive in New York who has a buzzer under his desk which he can reach with his foot and by touching it can make one of the telephones on his desk ring. The bell rings and he says: "It's important. I'll see him right away." The visitor leaves. That, of course, is the purpose of it all.

People are taking money out of their safe deposit vaults and are buying diamonds again, the New York dealers in precious stones report. During the past summer the price of diamonds reached the lowest point since the war, as might be expected in a period of world-wide depression.

In the long run there are few better investments than diamonds. They don't earn any interest on the investment until they are sold, but there never has been a time when a person owning a good diamond could not raise cash upon it on almost a minute's notice. More wealth can be concentrated in a small space in the form of diamonds than in any other commodity, and the tendency, for a long period of years, has always been toward increasing values.

Buying diamonds is certainly better than hoarding cash in safe deposit, because the money invested in diamonds does not go out of circulation, but continues to pass from hand to hand.

TODAY TOMORROW — FRANK PARKER STOCKBRIDGE

FAIRIES—origin of belief

When the Romans invaded Britain they found in the northern part of that country a race of diminutive people called the Picts, who lived in caves. That was nearly two thousand years ago, and there are no traces left of these little people, a race which, probably, also lived in underground dwellings all over Northern Europe.

A British scientist who has been studying the subject says that the widespread belief in a race of fairies, harmless little folk who lived in the wilds, undoubtedly has come down through generations of tradition about this extinct tribe of earth dwellers.

There is a great deal of evidence suggesting that the present races of humanity are merely the survivors of perhaps hundreds of different human types which have totally vanished because they were less fitted than we survivors to adapt themselves to the battle with nature.

ROBINS—a la Amerncan

An English writer sneeringly remarked in print not long ago that our American robin was not only quite a different bird from the English robin redbreast, but had no right to be called a robin at all, as it was merely a variety of thrush. He added, for good measure, that the American grey squirrel wasn't a squirrel at all but just a species of rat.

American naturalists have rushed to the defense of these distinctively American creatures. Our robin is, they admit, a variety of thrush—but so is the English robin! as for the grey squirrel, it is of exactly the same family as the English red squirrel.

Incidentally, I was puzzled when one of my country neighbors, not long over from Germany, complained that the robins were eating his corn. It took some questioning before I discovered that he was complaining of the crows. He did not know the English name for them and he called them by their German name "raben", which is pronounced just like robin but which in English is translated into raven.

GYPSIES—now motorized

That curious race of wandering people whom we call Gypsies have been famous for centuries as horse traders. It seems odd to me, therefore, when I offered an automobile for sale recently, to find that the country garage man with whom I was dickering had sold several cars within a few weeks to Gypsies. He told me that the Gypsy tribes of the northeastern United States have become just as shrewd and expert traders in second-hand high-grade automobiles as they ever were in horses. They travel by motor nowadays, and what their experts can do to an old car to make it look like new and act like new, at least until the buyer had paid for it and driven it away, is amazing.

Nobody knows much about the origin of these strange people. The name "Gypsy" is derived from their supposed origin in Egypt, but there is ground for belief that they are of the same stock as the Hindoos of India, with a plentiful admixture of the blood streams of many Eastern European races.

RELIGION—the newer concept

Professor Robert Millikan, world famous scientist, makes the surprising statement that among scientific workers religious faith is more manifest among the younger men than among the older.

Dr. Millikan argues from this that the wave of doubt which swept over the religious world, when modern science began to discover questionable facts which were not in harmony with some religious dogmas, has about spent itself. There has been, he admits, a decided change in the concept of God, but he maintains that there is no diminution, but rather an appreciation in the acceptance of belief in a Supreme Intelligence behind all physical phenomena.

The God of the scientist, Dr. Millikan says, rules the universe by set, definite laws. The only religious idea that has been discouraged by science is that of God of whims and caprice, to be appraised or propitiated.

I have long believed, with Dr. Millikan, that we humans are not the playthings of a blind fate, but that we can master and control our own lives by learning the laws of God, and bringing ourselves into harmony with them.

THE Minute-Men

There is another call to arms being issued from the heart of every small community . . . It is the desire to grow and become a strong factor in the development of the nation . . . To be placed ON THE MAP . . . and the call is for honest and thoughtful citizens, on whose shoulder the burden of growth and development must rest. The call is for the people who are willing . . . here and now . . . to give their all for the growth of our community and the return of Prosperity.

This can be accomplished more easily than most people are ready to admit . . . No strategist need be called in to form the ranks into battle formation . . . No drastic attacks on the enemy . . . No injured or slain to cripple the fighter . . . The call is for buyers, who will spend their money here in our town.

All through the history of our nation there have been Minute-Men to step into the breach and by their courage and perseverance carry through for the furtherance of national existence and the peace and prosperity of our people - - - The Colonial Minute-Man in his answer to the call at Lexington mapped a course for American Minute-Men through all generations - - - He gave his all, willingly and freely for the principle of liberty and that all men of this nation might enjoy equal rights and the opportunity to enjoy creation's bountifulness. The Minute-Men of 1775 faced a far more uncertain future than has since fallen to the lot of their fellow countrymen - - - They did not fail; they were true to themselves; they gave freely, and in the end they achieved victory.

ANNOUNCING

ESSEX TERRAPLANE

AND THE COMPLETE LINE OF HUDSON AND ESSEX

PACEMAKERS

We honestly believe the new ESSEX TERRAPLANE to be the most sensational motor car ever built. It is emphatically not "just another low-priced car," but a new-type automobile.

To a public fed up with small-car bobbling and big-car expense it offers the first combination of light-car nimbleness and thrift and heavy-car stability and comfort ever achieved in a motor car.

It is power set free — a thrilling new physical sensation—a smooth, skimming, dashing motion comparable only to planing in the air or on the water.

The lowest-priced Six in America — selling down among and UNDER the former lowest-price THREE—it outperforms the costliest cars in impartial scientific tests!

Because we believe large numbers of people have been awaiting just such a "post-depression" car—because we believe the 1932 Hudson and Essex Pacemakers to be outstanding values in the low-to-medium price fields—we are happy to announce our appointment as Hudson and Essex dealer for Addison and vicinity.

We invite you to visit our showrooms at your earliest convenience and inspect these three great lines of cars, as well as the thoroughly modern service facilities at your disposal.

WALL STREET GARAGE

TO THE PEOPLE OF ADDISON

The appointment of Wall Street Garage was undertaken with the utmost care and consideration. Both executives and personnel are men in whose integrity and ability we have every confidence.

We are certain that their dealings with the motoring public will add to the nation-wide Hudson reputation for courtesy and square-dealing in every transaction.

Public Service Commission Order Granting Pipe Line

to be used as a reserve or stand-by plant.

The granting of the application of the Southern Tier Corporation was opposed by the New York Central Electric Corporation which has received franchises from these towns. The New York Central Electric Corporation which is a subsidiary of the Associated Gas and Electric System contended that the granting of the application of the Southern Tier Corporation is not in the public interest and that there are not sufficient gas reserves available in the Rathbone Field.

One of the prime issues in the proceeding was the question as to the sufficiency of the natural gas reserves in the Rathbone Field. The engineers of both companies presented a wide difference of opinion on this subject but the evidence shows that if the natural gas reserves are not sufficient to supply the village of Bath a connection can be made with the line of the Columbia Gas and Electric Corporation which extends across the Southern part of the State between Binghamton and Olean. The lines of this corporation pass so close to the pipe line proposed in this case as to make available to the Southern Tier Corporation the natural gas being transported thru those lines and in the event that the reserves in the Rathbone Field fall below the reasonable requirience and necessity require that would thus be provided an additional reserve of natural gas transmitted directly to the proposed line of the Southern Tier Corporation.

The application to make available to the village of Bath the natural gas in the Rathbone Field has had the enthusiastic endorsement of residents and officials of the village as well as the owners of the gas acreage. The only opposition came from a subsidiary of the Associated System which is serving no gas in the village of Bath. Should the natural gas reserve in the Rathbone Field fail of utilization in Bath it may be that it will find no other commercial outlet and the benefit to the community of Bath with the substantial reduction in price for a richer gas is apparent.

In a report of the Commission it is pointed out that in reaching a determination in this case the Commission must either reject the application and thus deprive the people of Bath of the lower cost of gas offered or grant the petition with the possiblity that in the future the presently offered supply may become exhausted and a new source at possibly an increase in cost become necessary. The Commission believed that it should make possible the present saving offered which may continue for many years.

No other plan than that offered by the Southern Tier Gas Corporation for the transmission of natural gas to the village of Bath has been proposed. The opposition, while the possessor of a franchise, distributes no gas in the village of Bath which the Southern Tier Corporation proposes to serve. By a connection with the pipe lines of the Columbia Gas and Electric Corporation or a subsidiary, there would be available for the use of the residents of Bath, should the reserve in the Rathbone Field prove insufficient, the natural gas from other fields now being transported through those lines. In view of these conditions the Commission concluded that the granting of the application of the Southern Tier Gas Corporation was in the public interest and that public conveniments of the village of Bath there the petition be granted.

Protect Seed Terms By Amendment To Law

Both farmers who buy and those who sell seed in this State are certain to benefit from an amendment to the seed law which became effective August 1, declares Prof. M. T. Munn, seed analyst at the Experimental Station at Geneva. The change in the law controls the uses of such words as "certified," "registered-certified," "registered," "verified", or any other descriptive word or terms used to designate special quality in seeds he says.

"In the past organizations of farmers who were growers of special high-quality seeds which were sold under the classification of "certified" or "registered" were seriously handicapped by unscrupulous or careless agencies who used the same terms, but without meaning," says Prof. Munn. "The farmer growers had gone to extra effort to grow seed stocks which were true to variety name, free from weed seeds and fungous diseases, and of high germination only to find that they were competing with other sources using the same descriptive terms but in a meaningless sense. Also, farmer buyers who desired these high-quality seed stocks found that they were being deceived by those who used these descriptive terms in connection with seed stocks which had had no special merit."

The new law prohibits the use of any terms or words describing special qualities of seed stocks unless the seed stocks are genuine and have been certified or registered by an official organization approved by the Commissioner of the Department of Agriculture and Markets at Albany. In the past, the New York State Seed Improvement Association has been the only agency in this State legally qualified to certify and register seed stocks. Farmers have found that it is greatly to their advantage to buy certified seeds even tho the initial cost is slightly higher. This has been particularly true during the the last few years when the cost of production must be greatly decreased through the use of good seed. This new protection will be an immense value to those who want high-grade seeds.

Of all taxes collected in 1930, thirty-four per cent were federal, fifty-one local, and fifteen per cent state taxes.

THE FAMILY DOCTOR

By JOHN JOSEPH GAINES, M.D.

WARNINGS AGAINST

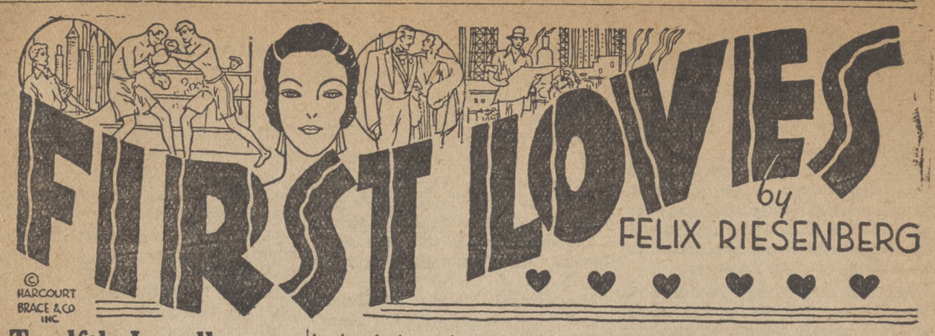
I heard a blithering charlatan the other night, hawking a well-known nostrum, and for every imaginable, trumped-up reason, urging the simple listener to buy it. You have heard this ballyhoo many times, delivered in a solemn, almost ministerial voice. I imagine they sell millions of bottles of the stuff—nothing certain about it but the pay for it.

This nostrum, you are assured, is good for everything from snake bite to gangrene! It was being exploited as a cure for ivy poisoning, common at this season. Somebody in despair had "swabbed the infected area—it acted like magic." The exploiting dramatist said the victim had accidentally touched "poison oak." That name is as ancient as the nostrum racket. Poison oak indeed!

Absolute ignorance was shown in the reference to "the infected" area. Ivy poisoning is not an "infection." No more than a burn by fire is an infection. It is simply an intense acid irritation—no infection-germs involved in the process. I have an idea that ivy acid would destroy many infecting micro-organisms. There is no "infected area" in rhus poisoning.

Carbolic acid is one of the deadliest poisons on earth; it needs no "germs" to aid it in killing folks.

The commercialized huckster that tells you his stuff will make wholesale slaughter of "germs" in so many seconds—is good to be wary of; he probably never saw a germ in his life; he is simply out to do a million dollars worth of business, and, you pay the freight, dear reader. Ask your family physician, who has been trained by the best methods known.



Twelfth Installment

SYNOPSIS: Johnny Breen, 16 years old, who has spent all his life aboard a Hudson river tugboat plying near New York City, is made motherless by an explosion which sinks the tug and tosses him into the river. He swims and crawls ashore where starts a new and strange life. He is ignorant, cannot read, and knows nothing of life in a great city. . . . Beaten and chased by toughs he is rescued by a Jewish family living off the Bowery in the rear of their second-hand clothing store. . . . Here he is openly courted by the young daughter. Breen fights bullies in self-defense . . . and soon is picked up by an unscrupulous manager who cheats him—until "Pug" Malone at the saloon-fight club, attracted to the boy, takes him under his wing. . . . On the other side of the picture are the wealthy Van Horns of Fifth Avenue. There is a Gilbert Van Horn, last of the great family, a bachelor, in whose life is a hidden chapter with his mother's maid—who leaves the home—to be lost in the city life—when Gilbert is accused. . . . It was reported the maid married an old captain of a river tug . . . rather than return home—and was soon a mother. . . . Under Malone's guardianship young Breen develops fast. . . . "Pug" discovers the boy cannot read—starts him to night school and the world commences to open for Johnny Breen. . . . Malone, an old-timer, is backed in a health-farm venture—taking Breen with him. There they meet and come to know Gilbert Van Horn. John attracts Van Horn, who learns of Breen's mother, named Harriet. Learning John's desire for an engineering course at Columbia University — he advances the money. John comes to know Josephine, Van Horn's ward, and during his school years falls in love with her. Graduating as a Civil Engineer he gets a job with a great construction company, working in New York. Breen has a rival for the love of Josephine, a rich man of the world by the name of Rantoul. But John wins out. He proposes and Josephine accepts.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY.

Rantoul, on learning of Josphine's sudden engagement, found urgent business calling him abroad. He had vast foreign interests, so she gathered from his letters, but he bore no ill-will; he was still her friend and never failed to ask after John. Post cards came to her from distant places, Cairo, Bombay, Singapore, Manila. Apparently he was going around the world. A pathetic word or two, a mere allusion, sometimes a picture of some lone pilgrim, gave her the feeling of a deeper message. Then, after some months, there was the long silence that might mean his return via the Pacific. Josephine found herself wondering when he would return. She did not show these cards to John. He was blissfully unaware of these romantic memories on the part of Josephine.

Meanwhile John's ability to earn the respect of his men by the use of his fists had earned him promotion. He had been placed in charge of Section One, the toughest job on the aqueduct.

Gerrit Rantoul returned from his world tour. He arrived at the beginning of the season; all of fashionable New York, that is, the New York capable of paying attention to fashion, was back in the city. He was finer, more considerate, more quietly correct, more distingué than ever. If Josephine had imagined him the least bit difficult, the least bit aggrieved, her fears were entirely removed on his return. Even Gilbert Van Horn was glad to see him. Rantoul was returning at an opportune time for Josephine.

When John Breen had appeared with his fist bandaged. Josephine shuddered a bit at the explanation. "I lifted a bum under the jaw." Perhaps it was anything but accurate, or heroic. Then too it was that Josephine found it more difficult to pit her charms against the insistence of the tunnel. John kept talking about an impossible Mr. Wild, evidently an uncouth and unreasonable person. Night after night he never came up, never came near his own rooms, and when Josephine did see him his eyes were heavy with weariness, his lids brilliant with the gloss of tunnel smoke.

For some months past a change had come over Josephine. She resented the growing place the tunnel was taking in the mind of her betrothed. Even gentle Marie Bashkirtseff would not have tolerated such lapses of devotion, and Josephine was a sensitive high-strung girl.

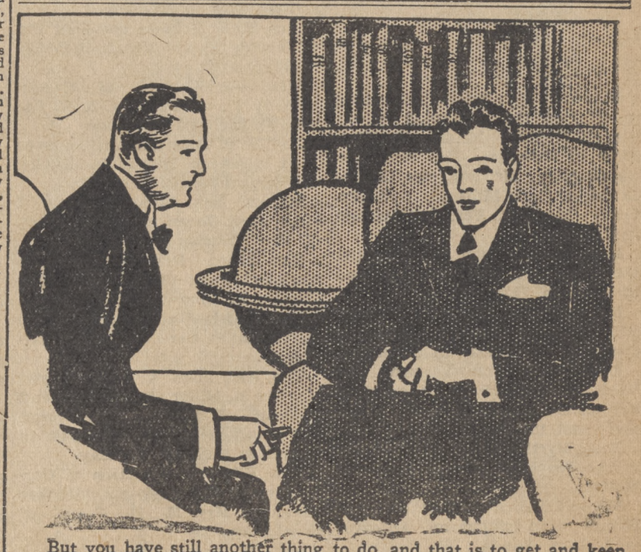
Even with the money she some day would have, on the death of Van Horn, life with John Breen might be more or less of a struggle. He would insist on working, would probably want her to go to dreadful places, the Andes, or the Sahara Desert; just what to do there she did not know, but young engineers took their wives to outlandish countries. Rantoul told her of such things, quite casually, of course. She would have to give as well as take.

Josephine found more occasion to find fault with John after his promotion. His heavy responsibilities as section engineer held him firmer and firmer in the grip of the tunnel. He was on the job hour after hour, day and night, and slept with a telephone at his bedside. He was compelled, time and again, to break engagements, to hurry from her suddenly. He felt restless and ill at ease when away from the tunnel.

"How long will this tunnel job keep going?" Van Horn asked one evening. He and John were in the library smocking for an hour that John forced himself to spare from the work, having had to phone Josephine that he could not accompany her to the Winterrow lecture on "Art, Life's Real Reward." She had already gone with Gerrit Rantoul.

"A year will see the main work done, the tunnel holed through and the lining poured. We are in the man-killing stage now!" John paused.

"I've been watching you — and Josephine." Van Horn continued slowly. "She's difficult, John, you know what I mean. Women demand a lot, I know, John, I know." The older man looked kindly at the young engineer. "This work is making you, but



But you have still another thing to do, and that is to get and keep your woman.

women don't see such things, not all of them, at least. Pug made your body what it is, the schools have helped your mind, but this work, with its damnable demands, is forging character. God, boy, I envy you the fight." Van Horn was tense. "But you have still another thing to do, and that is to get and keep your woman—your wife. It means a lot to me, John, more than you know. I wish a day could be set for your marriage; say next June?"

"I'm ready, Gil." John laughed and looked away.

"Josephine can get her trousseau in Paris, I've promised her that. I'll speak to her, a run across will do no harm, winter in the south of France, and back here early in the spring. How about that, John?"

"Things may be easier for me by that time, Gil." John visioned a winter of uninterrupted work. He would "get" the shaft and tunnel by that time; he would master the work, and take his place with the men who counted, the hard true men who worked with him on the job. Never in his life had he expected to have such slavish veneration for human beings as he had for the men of the great rock pressure tunnel crawling beneath the unknowing people of the city.

"By the way," John remarked as he was about to go, "Josephine is coming down to the job some night next week. I've asked Rantoul to bring her down. You've seen the thing. I thought Rantoul might like to see it, too. He got me the first appointment, I'll never forget that."

"Good boy. It's something that will open her eyes. Show her the whole works, John; good luck to you."

And the night Josephine came John was in the thick of a big tunnel accident.

Rantoul's gray cushioned limousine drew up silently at the entrance to the shaft enclosure. Josephine Lambert, on the arm of Rantoul, walked gingerly toward the shafthead. Women were crowding about the head-house; weeping, wailing women. Children were crying. She knew the tunnel was a terrible place. But this? It was horror! Something had gone wrong. Rantoul held her arm, and led her toward the office of the section engineer, Josephine trembled. "You stay here," he said, seating her before the desk in the deserted office, brilliant with its clusters of lights above the drafting tables. "Something wrong below. I'll see." He was superbly calm.

"John! I hope he's not hurt." She clung to Rantoul's hand. "Yes! yes! go! Tell me soon. Go—" she cried. "Don't go!" She was shuddering—white. But he had slipped through the door.

Her frightened eyes took in the fittings of the little office. The place reeked of labor, and the untidiness of working men. A garlic smell from the locker room conveyed a sense of common, uncouth feeding, as she sniffed the gas of damp carbide spilled while hastily filling tunnel lamps. And without, just beyond her sight, she heard the echo of an Homeric struggle rising from the shaft. The screams of women came to her, for the mangled bodies of men were being hoisted out. Why did Rantoul stay so long? Was John killed? Why had she come? Questions crowded upon her. She was dizzy, nauseated. The vile garlic odor was overpowering. She shuddered, sinking breathless in John's chair.

Presently Rantoul returned. "John is all right," he announced curtly. His eyes reflected a hint of things below. "I saw him at the shaft head; he went down again. Some poor fellows were killed—an explosion—God! what a hole!" Rantoul lit a cork-tipped cigarette, snapped the gold case with a click.

Suddenly he realized that Josephine was ill. He helped her to her feet; supported her to the open air. "We had better go," he said, quietly, and they walked down the little plankway outside of the enclosure to the waiting car.

John Breen, coming up from the tunnel with the last of the rescue party, ran to the office. A vague scent lingered over his desk, mingled with the aroma of an Egyptian cigarette. He stepped to the outside door and peered into the dark. Down by the curb was the limousine, and he saw Josephine entering the car with Rantoul. She was distant, exquisite, her hair glowing beneath the light in the car. She held Rantoul's hand a wan smile, was on her lips. They rolled silently away.

John was utterly tired as he washed the dirt and grease from his hands, using a gray paste smelling of naphtha and filled with an abrasive grit, a sort of mechanic's scouring pomade warranted to remove the most stubborn dirt. He was loosely jocular, his nerves were under scant control. He suddenly associated his cleansing with Josephine and burst out laughing. John again saw the picture of Rantoul, not the engineer, but the financier (he would always think of him so), handing Josephine into the car. John felt a bitter pang.

The engineers had come up, his assistants were cleaned and gone home, he had noted the events of the night in his official records and had again inspected the shaft. The watch was below in the tunnel, the din without had subsided for a while, the shaft was shut down—until midnight. John did not go home, he was too tired, too many matters of moment centered about the shaft, he felt a vague dread of the streets, he wanted to stay where he was sure of his foundations, his surroundings, his thoughts. In a dozen homes women and children were sobbing, sobbing.

A chastened Josephine was leaving for Paris and the south of France. A winter on the Riviera would do her good. John had had a long talk with Van Horn. "I'm beating the tunned, Gil," John said simply. He looked so capable, so well. John was confident, happy. He was entirely too happy to be safe, especially with a woman like Josephine, who demanded suffering from others.

But Van Horn looked bad, out of condition, yellow. Pug Malone would have shuddered at the sight of him. The fact that Gerrit Rantoul had taken passage on the same steamer, again on urgent business, may have had something to do with the depression of Van Horn. Still, when John and Rantoul stood together on the deck—John was seeing them off—Van Horn compared them and smiled.

INDIA'S FARMERS IGNORE POLITICS

Whether Gandhi or the King of England Rules is no Concern if Taxes are not Raised.

The farmer in India does not care whether Mahatma Gandhi or the King of England rules so long as his taxes are not increased and no one takes away his village rights, W. H. Wiser, a former missionary and now a student at Cornell University, explained in speaking from the University station WEAI.

Indian villagers are largely illiterate and a newspaper seldom reaches the village. News circulates as rumors and villagers have even heard that Gandhi was king, he says. The farmer's interests are limited to his own fields and to his own village; only a few have been led to contribute to campaign funds. The chief contributors are partisans and city people, especially high school boys, college students, and certain business interests.

The nationalists, he says, are now carrying on an educational campaign with villagers and are trying to win their interest. Where the villager has been reached by this campaign, he is torn between two loyalties: but he is non-committal. He is loyal to the English if he talks to an Englishman, and is loyal to the nationalists if he talks to a nationalist. The farmers who are active participants in the nationalist cause are usually paid agents, or those personally acquainted with Gandhi. The others, he says, prefer to cultivate their fields, tend their animals, and to smoke their pipes.

Appoint L. R. Simons to Succeed Dean Carl E. Ladd at State Colleges

Another New York state farm boy is promoted to an important position in the state college of agriculture with the appointment of Lloyd R. Simons, for four years state leader of county agricultural agents as director of the extension work of the state colleges of agriculture and of home economics at Cornell University. Professor Simons succeeds Dean Carl E. Ladd, who, like Professor Simons, is farm reared in New York state and is also a graduate of the college he now serves.

Professor Simons was born at Sardinia, Erie county; was farm reared. He graduated from Cornell University in 1911. From 1911 to 1914 he directed the agricultural department of the Gowanda High School. In 1914 he became county agricultural agent in Nassua county and in 1916 became specialist in extension methods for the United States department of agriculture. He was appointed assistant county agent leader at Cornell in 1920 and continued in that position until 1928 when he became county agent leader.

Dean Ladd in commenting on Professor Simon's appointment says, "In his twelve years as assistant and as county agent leader, Professor Simons has become known as one of the foremost county agent leaders in the United States. He is known as an authority on extension teaching methods and the organization details directed toward extension teaching. His experience with the United States department of agriculture, which gave him close contact with extension organization in thirty-three states has proved valuable to New York state farmers.

"During his period in office the farm bureau, or extension organization, has increased about twenty-five per-cent, in addition to added efficiency in teaching, and much closer working cooperation with farmers in counties.

"In New York state, Professor Simons originated the county agricultural committee plan where committees made up of representatives of boards of supervisors, business groups, and farm organizations meet with economics and other department specialists of the college to analyze what should be done for a county's agriculture. The plan is in effect in Seneca, Cayuga, Jefferson, Niagara, Ontario, Chautauqua, Genesee, and Oswego counties.

"Professor Simons will have the general supervision of all extension activities connected with the 4-H clubs, the home demonstration work carried on through the county home bureaus, the county agent work carried on through the county farm bureaus, the correspondence courses of the college of agriculture, the extension specialists, and farmers' institutes."

Grape Advertising Program Featured

The program of advertising and publicity which the farm bureau is carrying on in the interest of the grape industry is the subject of the Steuben County farm bureau exhibit at the County Fair this week. The exhibit is attractively decorated with grape vines and grapes and sets forth the many features of the advertising program. It is well worth seeing.

Those who visit the booth will be given a leaflet which contains a dozen or fifteen recipes on the various uses of grapes.

The farm bureaus of New York are engaged in an extensive campaign to advertise the products of New York farms. Nearly every commodity grown in this state is receiving some special attention in the effort to increase the demand for and expand the markets of New York farm products.

Hallowe'en Rat Campaign In Thirty-five Counties

Demand for Rat Killing Prompts Farm Bureau Campaign

The demand for rat campaigns such as were conducted last fall in a few counties in New York state has prompted thirty-five counties to join in one big drive on Hallowe'en Eve.

The fall campaigns have been found to be most satisfactory because rats are usually coming into the buildings at that time, and there is less food for the rats to get in the open.

It was thought by the farm bureau boards of directors that there would not be any interest in these campaigns this year, but so many folks, poultrymen in particular, have raised the question of consumption of feed by rats, that the area campaign will be waged.

Within a few days the county agents of the cooperating counties will send letters to farmers to determine the amount of bait to be required. This bait will be locally available to those ordering it so that no farmer will have to go farther than his nearest trading center to get his supply.

In view of the migratory habits of the rat there is distinct advantage in having the bait in any one community placed out at the same night.

Higher Farm Prices Bring Prosperity

Syracuse, Sept. 13—Failure of the prices received by farmers to keep pace with the rising prices of the products of urban workers which they bought was a leading cause of depression in the United States, said Fred H. Sexauer, president of the Dairymen's League Cooperative Association, Inc., speaking before the national convention of Exchange Clubs here today. No permanent recovery can be expected, he said, until farm prices rise, and that cannot be fully accomplished until farmers are organized and have assisting legislation.

"There are 3,000,000 to 4,000,000 rural homes that are today prospective markets for bath room fixtures, ketchen appliances, electric lights and other electric appliances," said Mr. Sexauer, "but no salesman can sell them because farmers have no money. For years farmers attempted to maintain a standard of living equal to that of the city workman. to do so they utilized the capital because income from their products was insufficient. Finally with their capital largely exhausted they ceased to exist as a market for products of shop and factory.

"Despite the popular opinion to the contrary farmers are fully efficient in their business as other industries. Because they are not organized the prices farmers receive are determined by conditions in world markets . There is no practical equivalent in agriculture for the trade association of industries. The farmer is attempting to act as producer, seller, worker, manager and investor. Farm prices suffer because of inadequate tariff protection. The things farmers have to buy are well protected by tariff, but his products meet world competition.

"What agriculture needs is organization of producers; state and federal legislation that will give farming as much protection as other industries and penalize it no more, and favorable public opinion based upon an accurate understanding of agriculture's problems.

Next to cod-liver oil and other fish oils, egg yolk is said to be the best source of Vitamin D, the sunshine substitute.

Lumber is bought in the United States by about forty different log scales. In New York there is but one official scale.

How What and Why?

This paper has arranged with the Office of Information of the New York state colleges of agriculture and home economics to answer questions about problems of farm and home. If you enclose a self-addressed, stamped envelope, and mention the name of this paper, you will receive a direct reply to your query from the colleges. Do not ask more than one question in one letter or on one post card. Ask as many questions as you like, but make each one a separate communication.

Storing Vegetables

Mrs. A. S., Sag Harbor, asks: "Will beets, carrots and white turnips keep in a dark cool cellar for winter use if buried in beach sand?"

Arthur J. Pratt, of the vegetable gardening department says "yes". He adds that if the cellar is rather dry, the vegetables will be kept in a more crisp condition if the sand is sprinkled with water every two or three weeks. The tops should be removed.

Smut of Corn

G. W. K., Hancock, writes: I send you a growth on a corn stalk near the top, and though I have planted corn in the state for more than fifty years I have not seen anything like it before. What is it and is it harmful?

Professor M. F. Barrus says the disease is corn smut, known by the scientific name of Ustilago zeae. Within the swollen tissue or boil is an outer mass of black dust, really made up of a mass of spores, or seeds, of the fungus. When the boil breaks open these spores fall to the ground, or are borne on the wind, or are carried to the barnyard with the stalks. They can live over winter in the soil, or in manure, and are not even destroyed by passage through the alimentary tract of an animal. The fermentation process in a silo, however, will kill them.

In the spring and summer these black spores germinate and produce many smaller light-colored spores which are blown to tender parts of the younger growth of new corn. These grow into the tissue, and form the boils in which the black spores are found. Because this fungus is not carried in the kernels or seed of the corn, seed treatment or the use of healthy, disease-free seed does not help to control the disease. The only practical remedy is to remove and destroy the smut boils before they break open. They should be cut off and placed in a sack and carried from the field to be burned, boiled or buried. They should be removed two or three times during the season to make sure that all the boils are found before they break.

While these measures will help, they cannot be depended on to give complete control because the spores are carried long distances on the wind. The disease is more common some years than in others, but ordinarily does not become particularly destructive except, perhaps, to some very susceptible varieties of corn.

There's Money in a Garden — By A. J. Pratt

Do Your Vegetables Keep Well?

For storing crops, each has its rule,
And there are lots of reasons why:
Beets and spuds keep moist and cool,
But pumpkins must be warm and dry.

This is the first of three articles about home storage of vegetables for winter. This article tells you the conditions that are needed by each type of vegetable. Next week there will be some suggestions on how to get these conditions if you have a furnace in your cellar, and the following week will make some suggestions on the best way to keep vegetables if you have no furnace.

The start must be made with a good quality vegetable. The best storage in the world will not make culls anything else but culls. The vegetables must be well grown, being neither immature nor old and tough. They should be free from injury caused by insects and diseases as well as from bruises and cuts caused by careless handling. Sometimes a bruise or a cut is followed by decay and that whole lot of vegetables is likely to rot.

With the proper temperature and the right degree of moisture content in the air, good vegetables can be kept good for a long time. The only things to remember are that you must start with good vegetables, handle them carefully and store them under the following conditions:

Root and leaf crops: beets, carrots, parsnips, potatoes, salsify, turnips, cabbage, cauliflower, Brussel sprouts and celery must be kept in a cool and humid place. The temperature should be from 31 degrees to 40 degrees F., and then relative humidity above 90 per cent.

Onions and dry beans should be kept cool but dry.

Squashes, pumpkins and sweet potatoes must be kept both warm and dry. They keep best if given an "after-ripening" period of two or three weeks after harvesting. For this, a dry room at a temperature of 80 degrees to 85 degrees is best. "After-ripening" causes them to develop a tough skin or shell to resist the loss of water and the entrance of molds and rots. Later they can be kept best at 55 degrees to 60 degrees F.

Former Governor Alfred Smith Won't Write "Democratic Case"

Albany, Sept. 20—Former Governor Smith has notified the publishers of the Saturday Evening Post that he will not be able to carry out his previous arrangement to write an article on "The Democratic Case" for that publication, which recently printed "The Republican Case" from the pen of Ex-President Coolidge. He does not give any reason, but a lot of people have been making a lot of guesses, and their guesses are very similar. They are to the effect that Smith is made of somewhat different material than Mayor Hague of Jersey City and Governor Ely of Massachusetts, both of whom repeatedly declared Mr. Roosevelt the weakest man mentioned in connection with the Democratic nomination, and later swallowed their words and asked people to vote for the New York Governor.

Pens Challenge to Roosevelt

Mr. Smith wrote a piece for the Post just the same, but it certainly was not intended to help the cause of Mr. Roosevelt. It dealt with the bonus demand at Washington and was one of the ablest presentations of that situation yet made. The former Governor held that the question of the immediate payment of the bonus, though important in itself, involved a matter of principle which is still greater. And he wound up by saying the people of the country are entitled to know the attitude on that question of the aspirants for the Presidency. Inasmuch as President Hoover's views have been well known for some time, the challenge was clearly intended for Governor Roosevelt. Nevertheless, the President has since restated his policy with clearness and force, and the chorus of demands that Mr. Roosevelt take a position on one side or the other grew in such force that it was agreed he could no longer play both sides of that question.

Planning for Hoover Day

Apparently there is going to be a very wide observance in this State of "Hoover Day" Friday, October 7, when card parties and other forms of entertainment will be given by the women in all sections. Aside from the social features there will in each case be a short talk on Mr. Hoover and his accomplishments. The money raised in this way will be used by the women in their campaign work.

Warden Wilson Loses a Guest

This time Warden Joe Wilson of the Great Meadow Prison at Comstock loses a guest. He was Leon Kraemer, one of the most notorious criminals in the place and though he escaped on August 23, the fact was not revealed to the public generally until three weeks later. The man made his escape hidden in one of the State cars used by the warden and his family, which was driven by a prisoner who acted as chauffeur for the Wilson household —and who also forgot to come back.

Bad Example Contagious

The driver can hardly be blamed. His conduct only goes to show that a bad example is contagious. It is only a little while since he saw Vannie Higgins, one of the most notorious criminals in the country, entertained over night as a social guest by the Warden—just a day or so before Higgins was shot to death by some rival underworld characters. It was shown that the warden expected his guest, who was engaged in booze running, and Mr. Wilson's own statement made at the time was interpreted to mean that Higgins might have been delivering something in his line. Though Governor Roosevelt was asked to remove Warden Wilson, he refused to act, letting him off with a reprimand by the head of the department, and it is said not even that much may be done in the present case.

Prison System Needs Clean-up

The system of coddling prisoners, of providing theatrical entertainment for them, and of soaking the taxpayers for sums with which to build palaces to keep them in, the riots that have occurred, all add to the proof, already abundant, that New York's prison department is badly in need of a thorough cleaning, which it will never receive under the present control of State affairs, or those connected with it.

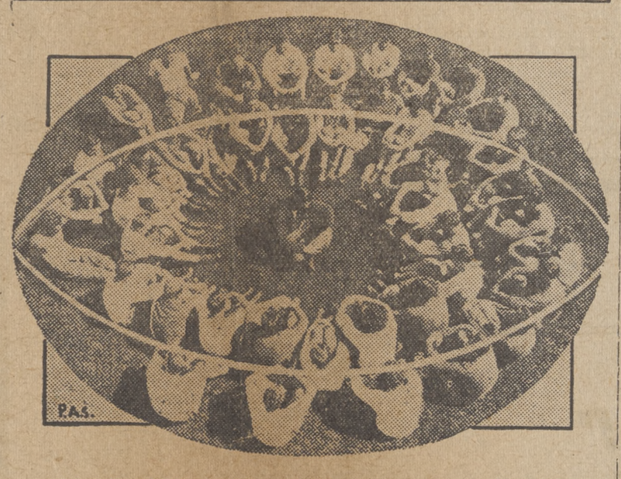
Gasoline in Tractors

When gasoline is used on a farm tractor the State of New York, under a law enacted by the Republican Legislature, does not collect any tax upon it. Under the federal law originating in the Democratic House of Representatives in Washington, Uncle Sam is not so considerate. It contains no provision for the exemption of gasoline used for strictly farm purposes.

A Sure American Sign of Autumn



On athletic fields of schools and colleges throughout the United States, thousands of young Americans are giving close attention to the words of trainers and coaches, each with high hope that his will be the name to thrill the crowds in our great national school game of football. The scene above is typical and most important of all this activity carries with it, excellent physical development and in learning a fine spirit of sportsmanship.

Lamb Hash and Peas

Monday is usually a busy day, and while the Monday dinner should be just as appetizing, it is wise to make that particular meal an easy one to prepare.

If the Sunday roast has been lamb, trim the fat from the meat and discard, put through the food grinder and add a half of green pepper finely ground or chopped, a few drops of onion juice (if the family like the taste of onion), and mix and soften with left-over gravy, or stock. If one has no stock, a beef extract cube dissolved in a cupful of hot water will answer the purpose.

After mixing the meat, green pepper and onion juice and seasoning, heat the mixture until very hot, sprinkle a little flour over the dish, and stir well, reheat, and serve on toast and add peas as a vegetable.

If your family likes boiled onions and your only reason for not serving them is that they make you "cry" when you peel them, try peeling them under cold running water. Turn the tap on slowly and hold the onion under the water as you peel.

Velvet, said to be quite the vogue for winter, may be made like new when wrinkled by placing the garment carefully on a hanger, suspend over the bath tub, turn on the hot water and allow the steam to remove the wrinkles.

To save innumerable steps, purchase a "service wagon". These wagons may be had with two or three shelves, and may be rolled from kitchen to dining room or pantry filled with dishes, either clean or soiled. After the meat course is on the table, the salad or dessert may be served from the service wagon, and the soiled dishes placed on the empty shelves, saving trips to the kitchen and back.

Strips of bacon placed on the breast of a fowl when roasting give a delightful flavor.

I have found it most satisfactory to add a small pinch of salt to egg whites before beginning to beat them, as they seem to beat more quickly, and keep a "shape" more readily.

Many cooks always line cake pans. Try using the heavy sort of commercial waxed paper cut to fit the bottom of the pans only. Grease the pans well first, sides and bottom, then place the paper in the bottom.

Cornell Football Prospects Bright For Successful Year

Ithaca, N. Y., Sept. 21—The football season at Cornell University will open Saturday afternoon, with the University of Buffalo as Cornell's apponent. This will be the first of four minor games before the first major contest of the season and it will be the first opportunity for a public scrutiny of the material available at Cornell this Fall.

Although the football squad is perhaps not quite as large as normally, Coach Gilmour Dobie, who begins his 13th year as head coach at Cornell, has a sizable group of experienced players available and early indications point to the development of a sound and capable football team.

Among the letter men on the job and who are likely to figure in the varsity team this Fall are Captain Bart Viviano, one of the finest backs in the East in the last two years; Johnny Ferraro, who brilliantly won his spurs as a sophomore back last Fall; Ray Hedden, a fine blocker and defensive player in the backfield; Jose Martinez-Zorrilla, left end on the varsity for the past two seasons; Harry Shaub, guard last season; Dick Rieber, right end, last year; and Bill Beall, one of the regular backs in 1931.

The principal losers are Wilford Penny, center, who has turned his attention to medical studies; Tullar, guard for three years; Rothstein, tackle and Handleman, back. Phil Kline, powerful fullback, is also missing.

While it is too early in the season to forecast definitely the makeup of the varsity team, these men are likely to figure in the opening game: ends, Martinez-Zorrilla and Donald Anderson, the latter a recruit from the freshman team; Dick Reiber and Edward Schumacker; Abe George, the latter a crack player two years ago, unavailable last year and now back on the team, and Frank Murdock, tackles; Nate Kossack and Harry Shaub, guards and Jerome Brock, center. Murdock and Brock were first string substitutes last season. In the backfield Cornell has Viviano, Ferraro, Hedden, all regulars, Wallace Switzer, a first recruit from the freshman team, John Frederick, another good freshman back last season; Bill Beall, Jack Goldbas, Robert Grant and others.

It is likely that most of these men will take part in the opening game. The schedule this year calls for contests with four major opponents: Princeton, Columbia, Dartmouth and Pennsylvania; only the Dartmouth game will be played in Ithaca.

Runaway Youths Returned to Homes

Two Cameron youths, Warren Crane, 14, and Otto White, 16, left their homes Sunday morning with the intention of seeing the world, first going to Binghamton where they changed their minds and decided to go west. The anxiety of their parents led to a broadcast at noon Tuesday and at three o'clock Chief Clarence Bailey found two boys answering their description in the vicinity of the Erie station in Hornell, the boys readily admitted their identity and were taken to police headquarters to await the arrival of relatives. Later in the day the wanderers returned to their homes a sadder but wiser pair.

Mr. and Mrs. William Freiday of South Orange, N. J., were recent over night guests at the home of Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Knebel.

LADIES AID MEETS CHURCH PARLORS

The September meeting of the Baptist Ladies Aid Society was held Tuesday afternoon in the church parlors with Mrs. Daniel Lackey and Miss Margaret West as hostesses. The president, Mrs. John M. Northrup, presided at the business meeting when it was voted to serve the business men at their next regular luncheon. Mrs. Joseph Allen and Mrs. James Erwin were appointed to act as a committee at this time.

Plans were made for the annual bazaar which will be held the 8th of October, in the old gymnasium. The following committees were appointed to have charge:

Fancy work, Mrs. L. L. Towner, Mrs. James Erwin and Mrs. Lewis Hill; aprons, Mrs. Joseph Allen, Mrs. Hattie Sly and Mrs. David Phillips; baked goods, Mrs. Root, Mrs. Guy Dann and Miss Ruth Dense; orange tree, Mrs. Laura Green, Mrs. Alvah Barkalow and Mrs. Thomas Hopper.

Mrs. Northrup read extracts from Dr. Frederick Lent's baccalaureate sermon to the graduates of Elmira College, entitled, "Riches, Perils and Stability of America."

Refreshments were served by the hostesses to the following: Mrs. Hattie Sly, Mrs. John Northrup, Mrs. James Erwin, Miss Amy Aumick, Mrs. Lewis Hill, Miss Betty Oldfield, Mrs. Eva Allen, Miss Margaret West, Mrs. Chauncey Hibbard, Mrs. Daniel Lackey, Mrs. F. Addison Won First Game of Series

Addison opened the big series with Elkland by taking a red hot game at Elkland Sunday by the score of 2 to 1. But only after a hair-raising battle from start to finish. Ray Spear for Addison and Preston for Elkland jumped right into a real pitchers' battle, which lasted to the last out of the game. The Addison pitcher had the best of the argument by being steady with men on bases, while Preston had a fatal tendency to uncork wild pitches at opportune times for Addison. Each man allowed seven scattered hits, but most of Addison's drives were hard hit and clean while several of Elkland's were scratchy. With men on bases Spear bent his back and had Elkland at his mercy. Preston struck out 18 Addison batters, but in the meantime walked several and made three wild pitches. Spear refused entirely to issue free transportation and five times struck out the side with men on second or third. Hopper was the fielding best bet. LaChance and Hoyt lead at bat, both driving out a double and single. LaChance also caught a clever game. Grange, Young and Riffle fielded well. For Elkland as usual Caffo played cleverly at first and Dorn at third.

Grange beat out a roller to start the second. Preston made his first wild pitch and John stole third. Another wild pitch sent him home. Things were quiet until the eighth. LaChance opened with his second hit. Riffle beat a bunt, sending LaChance to second. Another wild pitch came along. Hugic retrieved the ball and in a hurried effort to catch George at third threw wild and the runner came home. Elkland counted in the eighth in a final effort to tie the count. Preston received credit for a hit on a pop fly that should have been an easy out. An error on Caffo's roller sent Preston to second and Dorn bunted him to third, from where Preston scored on Smith's fly to deep center. Elkland went out in order in the ninth.

The second game of the series will be played at Tuscarora Field on October 2nd. The score follows:
